SHOTZ ENERGY GEL £1.35

I can't say I like the taste of these things – the lemon-lime version tasted how I imagine Toilet Duck might. But then I've never found an energy gel that tastes good, and the Shotz certainly do work. The gels are fairly low in sugar, plus they're gluten-free and don't contain any fructose, so they're easy to absorb when you really need them. JD

CHARGE SPONGE £11.99

These new Sponge grips from Charge aren't sponge, but a soft Kraton-style rubber. Sponge is just the name, consistent with Charge's kitchen brand identity. The grips are actually made by Velo in Taiwan and you will see them branded up by various manufacturers in the coming year, including Pro, which just sent us a similar pair of Vanderham grips. But Charge got them here first, so gets the props.

The Sponge is the same durometer as an ODI Ruffian but is thinner. It comes with machined clamps available in brown, silver or black depending on the grip colour and the bolts are fixed underneath, unlike ODI where one of the bolts is inevitably on the top, which you can feel while riding. Various surface patterns are available but Charge chose a file pattern on the top but a waffle grid underneath. It's a good choice.

Sponge grips twist a bit when wet, they aren't as durable as the Ruffians, and the end cap is a cheap plastic. PB
